Summer School on “Participatory Processes and Environmental Conflict Mediation in Social-Ecological Systems”

Oristano, Sardinia (Italy)

23–25 September 2025

About Summer School

Environmental challenges are deeply embedded in social, cultural, and political contexts. Understanding how perceptions, power dynamics, and participatory processes shape environmental conflicts is essential for developing just and sustainable solutions.

This Summer School brings together researchers, practitioners, and field experts to explore the role of participatory methods in the governance of natural resources, the mediation of environmental conflicts, and the co-production of knowledge in complex social-ecological systems.

Main Topics

- Perceptions of environmental risks: diverging views and emerging conflicts
- Governance of natural resources: institutions, power, and conflicts
- Participatory research practices: dialogue, negotiation, and mediation tools

Confirmed Experts

Veena Balakrishnan, Co-founder of the Youth Negotiators Academy (UK)

Kevin Collins, Senior Lecturer in Systems and Environment at the Open University (UK)

Stefania Leone, Full Professor of Sociology at the University of Salerno (Italy)

Target group: Max. 30 participants

- OurMED project partners
- NG4M network members
- Researchers and practitioners interested in environmental governance and conflict mediation

All participants shall receive an official certificate upon completion of the programme.
